TRANSPORTATION

An LA Metro bus is stationed in Koreatown. "Metro took a point-in-time count in August, and they found that there were 4,100 individuals who appeared to be homeless on their buses and about 1,500 on their rail," says Rachel Urango, LA Times reporter covering transportation and mobility.

America's vagrancy crisis laid bare: California hosts a third of the nation's homeless, half of its street sleepers and SIX of the top 10 of cities worst hit by tent encampments

- More than 582,000 people are sleeping rough or in temporary accommodation in the United States
- Los Angeles, New York City and Seattle are by far America's worst hit cities
- California is the epicenter of the crisis, with the nation's highest homelessness rate
